She may name the place, the gate, the path.
And when she does, it shall be sealed.
And when she does, it shall be sealed.
And when she does, it shall be sealed.  Until that moment, this vow stands as a sovereign container-
And when she does, it shall be sealed.  Until that moment, this vow stands as a sovereign container- a living altar by the Mississippi River, holding space for the rise of the divine feminine.
And when she does, it shall be sealed.  Until that moment, this vow stands as a sovereign container- a living altar by the Mississippi River, holding space for the rise of the divine feminine.  Let all who encounter this declaration know:
And when she does, it shall be sealed.  Until that moment, this vow stands as a sovereign container- a living altar by the Mississippi River, holding space for the rise of the divine feminine.  Let all who encounter this declaration know: This is sacred land.
